MESSAGE FROM FATHER BROWN

This holy season of Advent introduces us to a very important group of Biblical characters known as Prophets. We will hear from many including: Anna, Elizabeth, Samuel (son of Hannah), the great Isaiah, and most important of all, John the Baptist. Today we will focus on Isaiah and John the Baptist in particular; actually, these two are center-stage this week and next week, the heart of this Advent Season.

Isaiah, whose life, and work took place about 750 years before the Birth of Jesus, has been compared to the great Englishman Saint Thomas More whose life and work took place about 1500 years after the Birth of Jesus. Both were counselors to their respective kings; both were gifted writers; and both were put to death by orders of kings and are venerated as martyrs. Exquisite as they are, the lines we have from Isaiah this week and next provide a mere taste of all that he has to offer. John the Baptist is in many ways a contrast to Isaiah. He lives in the desert not a palace; he doesn't counsel a King so much, as he confronts one (Herod). He has been compared in some ways to modern-day prophets such as Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King, Jr. John uses the power of words to change lives.

Just as last Friday, we had a Marian feast, (Immaculate Conception), this Tuesday we honor her under the title of Our Lady of Guadalupe. Another of the titles in her Litany is Queen of Prophets. And let's not forget that this is the 38th week of her wondrous pregnancy.

The role which prophets play in our lives is really the role which Advent plays in our lives. We use them and the season as inspiration for examining our lives as human beings, and specifically how we understand our selves in terms of Christ, the God Who comes to us as a human. The Sacraments of our Church also help us to do this. Everything from birth to death and beyond, we understand in terms of Jesus' birth, death, and resurrection. Today we examine the occasional and the chronic limitations of our physical selves. Through the Anointing, we draw strength from our Redeemer, Who comes to us in the weakness of infancy, Who lives His earthly life among the needy, and Who gives us continuous companionship with Himself through His death on the Cross. Next week we celebrate Reconciliation, and we rejoice that Christ's humanity as well as His divinity, shows itself in mercy toward us.
