MESSAGE FROM FATHER BROWN

At the beginning of any endeavor human or divine, it is our nature to want an image, visual or otherwise. An example which comes immediately to mind is the restoration/renovation project underway at Saint Ambrose at this time. The artist renderings made early on in the project have been indispensable. The visual image of what is to come, seems at least in part, the reason for what Jesus does on Mount Tabor, to the benefit initially of Peter, James, and John, but eventually to us and billions more like us over two millennia.

Even though Mark the Evangelist is not himself an eyewitness, he spends many years as a close companion of Saint Peter, who also writes of his experience in an Epistle. Jesus offers “the big three” a glimpse of what is in store for all of His followers. However, the story is presented by Jesus as a kind of “strategic plan.” His Transfiguration, through which Peter, James, and John see Him glorified, (the way we will see Him in heaven), took place on Mount Tabor in Israel. In recent years, this episode received renewed prominence in Catholic teaching, when Saint Pope John Paul II named it as one of the Five Luminous Mysteries of the Rosary (October, 2002). As with any of the Lord’s miracles, this one is intended to help further His mission. While most of the miracles are used to attract the attention of the disciples in general, this one is for the Apostles, initially, these three.

The Apostles, with the exception of Judas Iscariot, will be the ones to teach about Jesus and form individuals into communities called churches. The original eleven will be joined by several others including Matthias, Barnabas, Silas, Mary of Magala, Paul, Timothy, Titus, and the Queen of Apostles, Mary of Nazareth. All of these and many more will learn of what happened that day on Mount Tabor, from Peter, James, and John. Jesus’ strategy is to motivate them for the trials to come, by showing them the glory that follows. I often think of Jesus as contributing at this time of year to the playbooks of sports coaches. Many of them invite their athletes to take a look at the medals and trophies, and then admonish them to stick to fundamentals and give their best performances. Peter, James, and John are initially rather tight-lipped about their experience, but eventually they tell the story to the whole world.
